NOTE

THE George Cabot Ward Collection catalogued herein is probably the last of the contemporary pictorial data of American history to be offered in its original assembled state. It represents prints published by N. Currier, Currier & Ives, E. C. Kellogg & Co., Sarony and Major, Magnus and a host of other American lithographers—masters in their day and famous for the true reproduction, pictorially, of important occurrences and scenes. Photography was in its infancy, and news prints did not furnish the news graphically,—thus leaving a wide field for the great array of artists, on whose work future generations must rely for authentic historical data.

The late George Cabot Ward, of New York, prominent in shipping and mercantile centres, was of high standing as a public benefactor, and until his death in 1892 was vitally interested in the school system of New York City. He claimed among his many friends Mr. N. Currier, who from the early forties until 1882 furnished us with more delightful reminiscences than all of the other American lithographers together. It was only natural that, with his spacious town and country houses, with his deep interest in the development of the nation, and with the intimate association of the foremost contemporary creative genius, Mr. Ward's discriminative gathering continued and developed for many years.

The collection of prints relating to sports, particularly those in which the thoroughbred is foremost, reflects the activity of youth and passes on into the less strenuous field of angling and shooting. The English publications of a wider scope enter largely into this section.

The American cities are well represented—New York City naturally with the greatest number, and with some of exceptional rarity. But the English masters claim their due proportion. Such prints as The Stormy Night and The Morning After, with Morland's Sportsman's Return, would be hard to equal to-day.

Taking the collection as a whole, there are notable prints for the collectors, others that will appeal especially to the historian, and decorative art for all lovers of old things with enduring interest and value.
